1st Edition of the World Book Day Mini Saga Competition

PRIMER PREMIO

Hopes of Blue

Inés Guerra Domínguez

At last, he had drowned in peace. There was nothing more to witness than a caressing blue softness and submarine silence, until a gentle whale melody came greeting tenderly the flickering flame of his soul and restored its light to his natural peers that, for him, had cried the ocean.

Monastic Gathering

Raúl Martín Santana

The night mass ended and it's time to sleep. The monks promptly retreated to their sleeping quarters. He moved so quietly, His hooves just above the ground. "What an unexpected meeting", He bleated to Himself. When He entered the room, all the black candles were already lit. He was expected.

No One Stands at Night

Rocío Fernández Álvarez

As we were walking down the road after the party, we touched. In the blink of an eye, our tongues collided and, after rolling on the ground, my body was bathed in his sweat. The cars were passing by so fast that no one could hear me screaming for help.

MENCIÓN ESPECIAL

I Wish I Were Rich

Javier Martín García

Tom decided to spend £20 on a lottery ticket. One day, while he was at home, he decided to watch the results of the lottery on TV. So unlucky was the man that the TV had broken down. Tom was the winner, but he never knew it. Poor 'rich' man!

Goodbye is a Hard Word to Pronounce

Yamila Tolosa Long

I felt her heart beating next to mine, our souls were aligned. Worthless was my love pray, it was certainly not enough to make her stay. One last time, I kissed her lips and solemnly, left the white room, while the doctor unplugged the machine which would bring her doom.
